

Marx on Ecology and even Psychoanalysis

By Karl Marx (1864)

- I. Perhaps poetry is more mathematical in a rigorous Grundrisse – returning to the elementary seed and its arcane ecology

In fact then being and non-being as in fact becoming. I mean then a seed, which is in bad conditions of life as a person, a living experience of Brumiare which is becoming, travelling, changing cities and living in working class quarters. Such things are ecological.

- II. Concept of Being and Essence – Grundrisse and Ecology

I mean conceptualise an individual and his reflections in nature (Sartre's note in 1971 reading the Grundrisse published as simply – pure being, discontent and nature) this then is reflections all the time in nature, all through about ecology. One should live on health as well in nature. I mean of course ecology and health.

III. Ecology, Health and Marxism

Marxism is about alienation from nature, and joining nature again in ecology. I mean a metabolic rift from nature – and one understands that when one is in a worst condition of health – it is a alienation from nature. It means in one sense the Dongists are correct – tea leaves is philosophy of nature but of ecology he forgets to say.